Overview

Boyle | Shaughnessy Law's Construction Litigation Group members include experienced litigators skilled in handling construction law cases in both state and federal court. Our practice includes defending construction defect claims on commercial and residential locations, as well as personal injuries taking place at construction sites.

We also offer consulting services in the area of contracts and safety programs. Our substantial experience in this practice area enables us to effectively serve general contractors, subcontractors, owners, manufacturers, suppliers, engineers, architects, and developers.

With offices in the northeast, our firm is equipped to handle a myriad of construction law matters throughout the region. The firm's extensive mediation, settlement, and trial experience allows us to aggressively defend and pursue our client's interests. Our clients range from large national construction companies to individual home improvement contractors. Additionally, we are approved panel counsel for several national companies to defend construction litigation matters.

Boyle | Shaughnessy Law represents building professionals in disputes involving local, state, and federal regulations, along with matters arising out of defective work or materials. In a pragmatic and cost-effective manner, we devote personal attention to manage our client's needs and resolve the dispute at hand.
