Overview

Boyle | Shaughnessy Law Premise Liability Law Group has expertise in the many types of cases that fall under the general heading of premises liability including injury claims from defective property conditions, nuisance complaints, and liability for criminal acts of third parties. We regularly represent owners, lessors and property managers in lawsuits involving claims for bodily injury or death due to defective property conditions, failure to maintain the property, and failure to provide adequate security.

Our Attorneys have also represented commercial property owners in nuisance claims arising out of alleged violations of local laws and ordinances. In addition, we have handled numerous cases primarily in the commercial context arising out of criminal acts of third parties on premises such as hotels, restaurants and other public venues. Such cases involved allegations of liquor liability, assault and battery, rape and murder.

Our Attorneys also represent clients involved in lease disputes, breaches of lease provisions, such as noncompetition clauses, and indemnity and insurance issues arising from lease provisions.

Boyle | Shaughnessy Law Attorneys have successfully litigated premises liability cases of all types and built a solid reputation for obtaining summary judgment in numerous premises liability cases.
